Antal Szerb performs a similar journey of descent in Journey by Moonlight (Utas és holdvilág), written in 1937, in the midst of another war. In this case, however, the land of the dead is not the wasteland of Europe's ruined culture but the hinterland of one's own memory, of one's own lost youth and the tragedies that characterized it.

Antal Szerb's "Journey by Moonlight" - Words Without Borders

— Antal Szerb, quote from Journey by Moonlight "The staying awake was a great self-sacrificing gesture of friendship, and wonderfully in keeping with our current mood of intense friendship and religious fervour. We were all in a state of shock. We engaged in a long Dostojevskyan conversations and drank one black coffee after another.
